Modern wives are not the only ones obliged to submit to the dictation of husbands as regards their dress. Napoleon III. was most fastidious in regard to the appearance of his beautiful wife, and could not endure to see her in a short or highnecked dress. Man's Afflictions.

Man born of woman, spanked by a hired nurse and jerked bald-headed by a cranky schoolmaster, is of a good while and attended with varied and select assortment of troubles. He lingers in the lap of luxury until his parental ancestors fire him out to begin his battle with the world. He hires out at $12 a week as cashier in a bank and is expected to board at a first-class hotel and wear a diamond as big as a walnut. Of the two evils he chooses the least and fetches up in Canada. He marries a "beautiful maiden of eighteen summers" and finds that she has a dutiful mother morning with his injugation, "look not upon the wine while it is red,' firmly imbeded in his mind, and as he has sworn not to look upon the wine when it is red, he squints at Tom and Jerry when it is "yaller." He leaves his vine and fig tree and goes out on the world a partner of domestic virtue and when the "wee sma" hours are come on a hackman takes him home "oroide." He cultivates politics, but gets "touched" by the strange bed-fellows. He joins a church, makes promises of reform, but they, like ten-cent lamp chimwill be taken down and transported neys, are easily broken.
